WNP Press. June, 2005

Hot News!

Dear fellowmen! We are happy to announce that LP Chip has gladly agreed to give us an unforgettable interview. Read on and you'll spot it!

Also, we are announcing the CTG composer of the day judging by WNP(Worth No Penny) Press standards. His name is M-Cubis.

Behind the scenes.

One popular actor told me that movies as we know them do not exist. All of them are not more than a skillfully done illusion. I asked him what he meant and he expanded his theory. This is what he had said:

"When you see a movie where cowboys shoot each other, actors don't really die. They just pretend to die by falling down and screaming. The bullets are fake and so are the guns. I know it sounds unbelievable, but it's true."

Of course, it all sounded a little science fiction to me. We all see that when an actor is shot in a movie, he spits real blood and then falls down dead. How can that be a trick?

"It is not real blood, it's tomato sauce", - said my interlocutor. - "Besides, if actors were killed for real, there would be no actors left after the Titanic movie or the Terminator."

But although his words sounded reasonable, I thought I'd never want to watch a trick movie again. How can you watch something you know is a lie?

Did you know that...

For the dog to perceive a signal from you, he must feel it, hear it, or see it. Most training equipment relies upon touch and therefore upon the dog's physical sensitivity. Touch sensitivity can vary from breed to breed, individual to individual dog, as well as being highly dependent upon the situation. A calm dog at home may yelp in anguish if you so much as step on a toe, but in an excited state feel none of the leash signals you send. Be sure to choose equipment that your dog actually perceives as information. This may require several equipment choices depending upon the activity and/or situation.

As a predator, the dog is "hard wired" to react quickly to movement. The canine eye actually contains more of the components that detect movement than does the human eye. Beware of any equipment which necessitates large hand or body movements in order to be effective. Your dog's brain will have to sort out that movement before it can work on figuring out what you were trying to communicate.

Interview with LP Chip

Q: Do you read a lot?

A: Depends... If you mean books, then its a no. But i do read alot online in forums and at my job i have to read alot too (I do read books from time to time, but its minimal)

Q: Do you agree that garbage literature is preferrable because not only you can read it, but also wrap stuff in it?

A: I think its prefferable because the stories in it are usually small, which can be read to consume like half an hour of time. I wouldn't use it to wrap stuff in it though...

Q: Who is your favourite writer and why? (yep, this is an overused question, I know. That's why it became black'n'gray of usage.)

A: I like Stephen King. The kind of stories really fits my preferences.

Q: What do you like more - a good ride in a car or a pizza?

A: Tough one. I really like both. But I like to drive a car more I guess...

Q: Is it true that you have a chip implanted in your brain that makes you do music that sounds like it was made by a computer? If it is indeed the case, where can our readers buy those chips and what hospitals do the implantation?

A: Hahaha, If there is a chip in my brain, the doctor overlooked it. I guess im too inspired by computer chips to make the sound similar...

Q: I've heard that LP stands for Lechi Pamerick. What the hell is Lechi Pamerick?

A: Where the hell did you heard that? Cus it doesn't stand for Lechi Pamerick. LOL. If it makes you happy, LP stands for Leon Pascal, which are my first and middle name.

Q: What can you say about the success of your latest release? Did you intend to create such a hit? (What's your latest release, btw?)

A: My latest release is Synth Orchestra. I didn't planned it to be such hit, cus its a demo song for a VSTi i made. But it turned out so well that i released it. I made the song about half a year ago though, so technically its not my latest release. Step Forward would be my latest release, and that song was planned to be what it have become

Q: Okay, thank you very much for this interview. Before you go, last question: how often do you hear the voice of the great frog?

A: Thanks for the interview. I hear it every night.
