The FRANK Is Alive!!!

Dr. Richard Mardwin from New York City was having a breakfast this Tuesday when he noticed that the frank on his plate is moving. It puzzled him and he decided to see what made the sausage move.

After some researching, he found out that the movement happens when he bends the sausage. Reacting to such a move, the frank bends back to it's original position. (Our artists have worked all morning to present you with a picture which you see below. The arrows show the amount of bend.)

It is important to bend the sausage not too much, as it may break and you will kill it: yes! Dr. Mardwin has suggested that franks are a lifeform! He based his conclusions on several points.

Point One - the frank reacts to the bend. Thus, it adapts itself to the enviroment which is one of the indications of life.

Point Two - franks reproduce. Modern science is not sure how the mechanism works, but it is suggested that you go to a local supermarket and check it out by yourself - there are hundreds of franks! Now how can there be so many of them? There must be a reproduction process of some sort!

Point Three - franks eat. They take in the vegetable oil when prepared.

The conclusion is obvious. Every person, spitting a frank is a killer of unique creatures. Laws should be taken against this. Franks should be preserved, studied and cultivated.

The Flying Cow

Astronomers from Germany noticed a weird object that was moving in the upper layers of the atmosphere and irradiated regular audio signals. Thinking it is a comet or a UFO, they magnified the image and to their surprise saw a cow. The cow said 'moo' every five and a half minutes. The travelling 'moo' signal suffered several reflections from ionospheric layers, thus resulting in a well compressed, reverbed and echoed sound. The sound was sampled and presented to several local djs for a fee of 15$.

The origin of the cow remained unknown until a farmer from Oregon reported a cow missing.

He said that in an attack of sudden anger he kicked his cow and the energy delivered by the kick was enough for the cow to gain the necessary speed and proceed as an artificial satellite. While on its orbit, the cow smashed down three weather probes and a NASA observation station. It resulted in great loss of speed and the cow started its way down in nineteen hundred hours yesterday. By this morning it reached Oregon and performed a successful landing.

Scientists believe that the animal did not suffocate due to various biological, exoterical and generally unknown reasons.
